The Basics

Full Name: Cathal Faragher Ó Meadhra

Nicknames: None

Age: 25

Birthday: March 19 / 18 Glastachàm

Gender + Pronouns: Cis man, he/him. He's intersex as well :-)

Sexuality: Gay

Occupation: Traveling seer

Personality

Description: Somewhat aloof and entirely absentminded, Cathal has built a reputation in Symphonia as a mysterious figure. He doesn't talk much with others outside of his friend, Séamus, and Sagart Cadhla Taggart, who is the head of the Theadairannach church he lives behind. The rich nobles which have gotten fortunes from him swear by his practice, but often mention his rather disconcerting manner when interacting with them. Cathal can be rude at times, is flippant and aloof more often than not, and he never seems to give anything his undivided attention. This doesn't seem to be helped by his spirit guide, Suibne, who seems unable to stop herself from narrating every thought that pops into her head.

Likes: Foggy weather, spending quiet time in a garden, art, music, fashion

Dislikes: Cars, the color red, solitude, tight clothing, ties

Hobbies: Reading! He spends a lot of time at the library, and always gets books as a gift for Fèill Uarach, the Theadairannach New Year.

Talents: Skilled poet and writer, but he doesn't particularly enjoy sharing his writings.

Magic

Magic Type:

Natural Magic: Argentauger

↳ Powers:

- Power: Second sight, which allows him to see future events with complete clarity.
 - Drawback: Events as he see them will not always unfold exactly how he witnesses them. All of the people in his visions are represented by idealized forms of themselves, their “true self” so to speak, making it hard for Cathal to identify who exactly he’s seeing.
 - Limits: There are never indicators of when or where his visions will happen, making the information somewhat useless without significant work to interpret it. Suibne is able to help somewhat, but it’s only through personal experience and the rare chance of having multiple visions of the same event that Cathal has become able to understand what he sees. While he can trigger visions in most cases, he has very little control over what the vision will be about.
- Power: Sixth sense, or the ability to see ghosts, not just of sapient creatures like mages and humans, but sometimes also of animals.
 - Drawback: Spending time in areas with lots of ghosts can become overwhelming, especially in sites of mass death events. They often make a noise similar to radio static that, when multiplied several times over, drowns out everything else.
 - Limits: Cannot communicate with ghosts without significant effort, which can cause magic fatigue.

↳ Strengths: He has a pretty good understanding of how his visions are constructed and how to analyze them. What he sees in his visions is incredibly clear and strong.

↳ Weaknesses: The trauma that resulted in his powers manifesting has made averse to using them He only ever purposefully triggers visions if there’s money in it for him.

↳ Traits: Cathal have full mental breaks if he has a vision he can’t control. Of course, his mental state affects what kinds of visions he has, meaning that those horribly triggering visions are the most common. These visions are also very powerful, causing incredible magic fatigue.

Learned Magic:

↳ Affinity: Aile fendeilagh, a form of charms made of sticks, grass twine, and animal hair or teeth. A single aile fendeilagh charm is called a crosh.

↳ Strengths: He’s good at tensioning the twine and creating the croshyn.

↳ Weaknesses: His croshyn are not particularly strong magically, though they’re extremely accurate. He figures this is because the materials he has access to in Symphonia are not the same as those in Ùir Uaine.

↳ Traits: Cathal’s croshyn are almost surgical in their construction. This should mean that they’re very strong magically, but they aren’t.

Backstory

Parents: Meadhra Ó Eoghan, Marquess of Àrd-tìr (father, Canda), Marchioness Éala Bean Uí Eoghan (mother, Canda)

Siblings:

- Meadhra Ó Meadhra (30 y/o older brother, Canda): Oldest child and heir to the title of Marquess of Àrd-tìr. Goes by his middle name, Eoghan, and is married to Freoagh Liauyrafuilte Bean Uí Meadhra. They have two children: Ainla Ní Meadhra and Feena Ní Meadhra.
- Fintan Ó Meadhra (29 y/o older brother, Canda): Second child, moved to Viridia shortly after his 18th birthday and has gone completely no-contact with his family. There are rumors he lives with a witch coven, but nothing has been substantiated. On Cathal's mother's side, he's often referred to as Jamys Liauyraahóilshe.
- Móirín Bean Uí Ailbhe (28 y/o older sister, Canda): Oldest daughter, and wife of a rich merchant named Ruarc Ó Ailbhe. She has one son of her own, Brennus Ó Ruarc.
- Lorcán Ó Meadhra (26 y/o older brother, Canda): Closest sibling to Cathal in age. He was in the front passenger seat during the car accident, and sustained multiple injuries resulting in paraplegia. Does not intend to marry.
- Étain Barclay (23 y/o younger sister, Canda): Wife of a Ùirannach nobleman named Murchadh Barclay, Duke of Brùgaonach. Lives in the southern part of the country, and doesn't speak much with her family.
- Brighid and Cadhla Ní Eoghan (22 y/o younger sisters, Canda): Identical twins who are never seen apart from each other. When they were 10, they took a vow of silence, and haven't said a word since. They seem to have their own sign language—a mix of Ùirannach Sign Language, Féarcronnan Sign Language, fan language, and their own system of fingerspelling—they use to communicate. Both have been the subject of many marriage proposals, but most assume that neither sister ever intends to marry.
- Bébin Ní Eoghan (20 y/o younger sister, Argent): Middle of the three Argent children of House Àrd-tìr, she hasn't been seen in public since Cathal left Féarcronna. He was very close with Bébe, to the point of practically raising her after her powers manifested. Her spirit guide is their maternal grandmother, Móire Bean Uí Brennus.
- Lachtna Ó Meadhra (19 y/o younger brother, Canda): University student at the Royal University in Brùgaonach. He was in the back seat with Cathal during the car accident, and broke his arm.
- Macdara Ó Meadhra (18 y/o younger brother, Canda): Currently attends a private school near Feurespiric.
- Oisín Ó Meadhra (16 y/o younger brother, Argent): Second youngest child and fraternal twin of Fianna. Shortly after his powers manifested when he was 11, he was selected to become one of the Nua-ghinte, and was sent to Staing to live in the Clabhstair de Nathraichean. He has limited communication with his family, and it's unknown who his spirit guide is.

- Fianna Ní Eoghan (16 y/o younger sister, Canda): Youngest child and fraternal twin of Oisín. Her brother's departure from the family 5 years ago has led to her having significant mental health issues, which has resulted in multiple horrific visions by her Argent siblings.

Other family:

- Paternal grandparents: Eoghan Ó Brennus (grandfather, Canda) and Rhennee Liauyralowaltys (step-grandmother, witch). Eoghan's first wife, Móirin (Argent), died by suicide when Cathal's father was a teenager, and Eoghan married Rhennee shortly after the birth of Cathal's oldest brother. Though he is not particularly close with his father and step-mother, the Marquess allowed them to select Tuilmefiod names for each of his children when they were born, as well as a surname when they came of age. Cathal's is Faragher Liauyrablakail.
- Maternal grandparents: Seosamh Ó Ardghal (grandfather, Argent) and Fiadh De An Ghoill (grandmother, Viri). They live on a farm in a tiny village in Féarcróinna. Cathal's mother Éala is the older of their two adoptive children, and the oldest of their three children. Éala's biological parents were friends of Seosamh, and died when she was a baby.
- Gilno Liauyrabangannyn (Canda/witch) and their spouse, Aalid Liauyraahille (witch), paternal half-uncle and nauntnaim. Gilno is only a couple years older than Cathal at 27-years-old.
- Ruaidhrí Fear Uí Deirbhile (Auri) and his wife, Neasa Ó Deirbhile (Cae), maternal uncle and aunt. He's the middle child in Cathal's mother's family, and also adopted. Currently helps his father run their farm, and was recently elected Ceannaire of their village.
- Doireann Ní Ardghal (Viri), maternal aunt. Youngest and only biological child of Cathal's mother's parents. She's a well known landscape artist and sculptor currently living in Sur-Mer.

Description: TW FOR CHILD ABUSE AND NEGLECT, EATING DISORDERS, MENTAL ILLNESS, SELF HARM AND SUICIDAL IDEATION, CAR ACCIDENTS, ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE

The fifth of 13 children, Cathal always felt overlooked and underloved by his parents, who often passed off child-rearing duties to nannies, tutors, and even the children themselves. On the rare occasion he saw his parents, his father was often drunk, and his mother was rather superficial in her love for her many, many children. More often than not, Cathal's sisters were responsible for taking care of their younger siblings, with older sister Móirin and younger sister Béibinn often taking the role of surrogate mother to the youngest of them, stepping in when their nannies were unavailable. For most of his childhood, Cathal considered Móirin to be his true mother, despite being only 3 years younger than her. When she was sent to a boarding school at the age of 13, it severely affected many of her younger siblings, including Cathal, who became extremely depressed. He struggled with proper eating habits, and often considered suicide, though he could never get further than non-fatal self-harm.

Cathal's powers manifested late, likely due to his mental health issues and disordered eating. As he neared manhood, he was required to spend more time with his father, which often led to him being put in dangerous situations. The worst of these was when he was 12—he, his father, and two of his brothers went on a car trip to the nearby village of Tuilmefiod. While the drive there went relatively smoothly, on the way back, his father began driving erratically and eventually swerved off the road, crashing into a dead wych elm. Cathal broke his right leg in several places, resulting in a permanent limp, and his older brother, Lorcán, received a spinal cord injury, resulting in paraplegia. His father broke several ribs and his leg, and Cathal's other brother, Lachtna, broke his arm. The force of the car hitting the tree also revealed the remains of a young woman which had been in the hollow tree trunk for over a century. Disturbing the remains dislodged the young woman's ghost, who immediately attached herself to Cathal, resulting in his powers finally appearing.

Being the only Argentauger in his family, especially considering the circumstances in which his powers were revealed, was incredibly stressful for Cathal. His mother attempted to have her father move from Féarcronna so that he could instruct Cathal, but he refused, once again putting him at the mercy of tutors. Suibne, his spirit guide, was little help in terms of acclimating Cathal to his magic, as her own spirit guide (her grandfather) had not been the best teacher. However, Cathal does credit her with improving his mental health in the year or two after the car accident. Having Suibne around meant that Cathal could escape the stress and toxicity of the manor, as he finally had someone to talk to about his problems that wasn't a fellow victim of the Marquess and Marchioness's behavior. Unfortunately, when Cathal was 15, his sister Bébin was also revealed to be Argent, and his mental health once again took a turn for the worse, as he became responsible for instructing her in use of her powers. Having their grandmother, Móirin, as Bébin's spirit guide helped alleviate some of the stress Cathal felt trying to basically raise his sister, but he was still made to be her surrogate father when he had not yet reached adulthood. To cope with this, Cathal began to sneak alcohol out of his father's liquor cabinet, and regularly drank himself to sleep. Unfortunately, his alcohol abuse often resulted in visions that Cathal had little power to stop or control, so he quickly switched to the use of opioids, which were far more reliable in dampening his thoughts, and his powers along with them.

After a particularly traumatic vision of the death of a close family member, Cathal decided to leave Ùir Uaine. He traveled around Féarcronna for a while, working as a seer, before coming to Symphonia when he was 22. During this time, his alcohol abuse worsened, and he developed a full-fledged addiction to opioids. Using money sent by his sister Móirin, Cathal was able to rent an apartment in the Cinders, where he continued to work as a seer as a way to support himself. A few months after arriving there, he met Séamus Dubhghall, who moved in with him. Though at the time they were hardly even friends, Cathal quickly developed feelings for Séamus. Not wanting to lose him, when Séamus decided to return home with the intent of getting clean, Cathal followed. This also improved his relationship with Suibne, who had distanced herself from him as much as possible as his addictions worsened.

They lived with Sagart Cadhla Taggart of An Eaglais de Bean-Uasal Mòr in Anvilway, but only three months later Cathal's mental health once again worsened, and he left the church to return to the Cinders. Séamus followed soon after, and the two quickly returned to their addictions, couch surfing together and supporting themselves with money from Séamus's job at the Riviera Hotel and checks sent by Cathal's siblings. After Séamus nearly died from an overdose, he and Cathal once again tried to get clean and returned to Anvilway. Cathal has been trying to focus on his own recovery, but from time to time will go to the Riviera or other areas with lots of rich people to make money overcharging them to hear their fortunes.

Inventory

In addition the the things listed here, you can add any mundane item you want to your character's inventory

Magical Tools: Not exactly a magical tool, but a tool that helps with his magic—Cathal keeps a notebook on him where he records his visions, as well as any notes he believes will aid in his interpretation of them. This includes a list of the many characters he sees and his theories as to their real life identities.

Other: Kept in a small glass jar in his pocket are several teeth, taken from Suibne's skull. Cathal initially didn't want to take them, but she suggested that having a physical manifestation of her body might make a good focus when attempting to induce visions. This hsn't really been true, but at this point it's a sort of sweet physical reminder of his friend and guide. He also has one of her fingerbones on a chain around his neck, though this necklace gets hidden under his shirt.

Spirit Guide

Name: Suibne Ní Suibne

Description: A young woman, somewhere in her early 20s. She has long red hair in two braids, and she wears a white coif and a dark grey veil, a simple grey dress, and a purple rope belt. She is not wearing shoes, and the bottoms of her feet are very dirty. The knees of her dress have grass and dirt stains, and her fingernails also have dirt under them. She is very pale, and covered in freckles. There is a slight gap between her two front teeth. Because she is a ghost, her marks do not change.

Background:

The only child of Caomh Ó Suibne and Aithbhreac Cilloch, Suibne was named after her father's father, a poor travelling seer from Féarcronna named Suibne Mylecaarjyn, who died only a couple months before her birth. The family lived on a farm in what is now a part of Ùir Uaine, over 6 centuries ago. Suibne had a normal childhood, developing her powers at the age of 11. With no living Argentauger relatives, she was almost entirely dependent on her grandfather's spirit for her magical education. Unfortunately, he was a rather poor teacher, a fact further compounded by a language barrier—while the younger Suibne grew up speaking Common and Ùirannach, the elder Suibne was only fluent in Chengargid, the language of Tuilmefiod and the Lhioulansleih coven, which his mother had been a part of. Because of the lack of other Argent nearby, Suibne struggled to communicate with her grandfather, and therefore had very little knowledge about or control over her powers.

When she as a teenager, Suibne had a vision of a wych elm being struck by lightning, causing it to bleed. Due to her lack of solid education on seeing, she struggled to interpret the vision, but knew that it meant something bad as coming for her and her family. Only a week later, fighting broke out the Ùirannaich Royal Army as they attempted to take more control over the region where Tuilmefiod is located. Suibne doesn't really remember anything specific about this time, but knows that she was murdered, though she is unsure by who.

After her body was deposited in the trunk of the wych elm, her spirit entered a sort of coma, and was not awoken until Marquess Meadhra Ó Eoghan crashed his car into the tree over a century later. Seeing the unconscious Argentauger laying in the car, Suibne attached herself to Cathal with the intention of becoming his guide. When he woke in the hospital, Cathal was initially put off by his new powers and the existence of Suibne, but her cheery personality quickly won him over, and the two became fast friends. A few weeks after the accident, Suibne, had Cathal return to the site of the crash. Together, they collected her bones, which Cathal took to his family's home and buried in their garden.

Suibne has struggled a bit with Cathal's substance abuse and mental health problems. Being a ghost, she has no way to communicate her concerns to others, and is somewhat stuck having to watch Cathal suffer. Now that they live with another Argent, she is able to talk to Sagart Cadhla and her guide about her thoughts and experiences, which has improved her relationship with Cathal.
